What We Believe and Why

Study & Teacher Guide
What We Believe and Why is typically used in a few different ways: by an individual as a way to understand the Christian faith in an organized and deeper way, by mentors training those who have been called into ministry and need systematic theological training but not a full load of seminary coursework, and by adult study classes and small groups.

There are six key areas of learning that happen in the course of studying What We Believe and Why. Frankly, the book can be read quickly and these key areas either missed or grasped incompletely, so I’m going to list them explicitly in the hope that they will be appropriated fully and used intentionally and robustly in the course of our Christian lives:

1. How to think rigorously and theologically, and discern between the essential and the important. This ability will equip Christians with a skill that will be valuable for their entire lives as believers, and help guard them against both heresy and hubris.

2. How to intentionally engage in a Life in Christ, learning to live and love as He taught, demonstrated and commanded. This begins with being saved, proceeds through a life of willing and sometimes difficult sanctification, and leads to a life of glory into eternity. For the individual and the community of believers, this is who Christians are.

3. How to comprehend the wide variety of Christian beliefs in the world in a way that is both astute and fair. Shallow understanding and caricature are impediments to love and truth in the whole Body of Christ.

4. How to understand and value key concepts developed by tradition and theologians without allowing them to become idols or the cause of evil speech. Theology can be a valuable help in understanding God, Scripture and Biblical principles. It can also be used in ways that harm others and wrongly cause division. The text shows how to avoid this.

5. How to wrestle with other Christians who differ from us, allowing both of us to grow in our understanding of the Gospel and each other. Iron sharpens iron, but only when rubbed in a certain way. Otherwise iron damages iron. The method of interacting with others so that both are sharpened is set forth practically and biblically.

6. How to genuinely respect, love and protect other Christians, especially those who differ in tradition, theology and practice. This is a step beyond even the most productive debate, and teaches us how to embody what Jesus desired for us in His prayer in John 17.

The goal is to sharpen the Christian mind and strengthen the Christian heart. The sharpening of the Christian mind is to help it discern clearly all that it sees.
in light of the Gospel. The strengthening of the Christian heart is to help it carry out Jesus’ commands to love God, neighbor and even enemy, especially when that is very, very difficult.

If you are an instructor using this book for a class, and especially if you have language skills in Hebrew or Greek, or significant knowledge of theology, church history and church polity, there are many, many places in these pages where you can expand upon what is here, take your students even deeper, and explain (in the broader context of the whole Church) why your tradition or teaching might emphasize certain doctrinal or worship distinctives.

Some of the instructions in the chapters listed below, such as “Write an in-depth paper…” are primarily intended for individuals being trained for ministry and whose preparation is therefore more intense and demanding. These exercises can then be scored by the mentor to assess the depth of understanding of the student – since that student may well be called upon some day to explain the faith, or defend it, and needs to be well-equipped.

Other instructions are really intended to spark reflection and insight, to ignite conversation and exploration. It is often true that we Christians have beliefs or concepts about the faith that we assert, but we don’t really understand why we believe them. The book provides explanations for much of this, of course, but asking readers (especially in a class or small group) to think about or explain these things out loud builds confidence and competence.

One final note: as you know if you’ve completed the book, it has a strong emphasis on the value of vigorous discussion and debate, but strongly cautions against personal attack in such “wrestling.” Attack can be overt, such as “You’re a heretic if you believe that,” or subtle, as in rolled eyes or a demeaning attitude. Truth is, all of us have some ideas about the faith that ultimately we will learn were mistaken. And we learn better when we feel safe in expressing an idea or opinion if we are not put down or marginalized when we get it wrong – by an instructor or another member of the group. Of course it is alright to correct someone who is way off base, but be sure to do so in a way which makes them know they are valued and welcomed. We should each make that the standard of mutual respect that all members of the group are expected to follow.

My thanks to Judy Davis for her work in creating this guide. I hope it is a blessing for you.

Chapter 1 – What We Believe and Why

1 Theology. React to this term without looking it up.

What comes to your mind when you encounter this word? Vital? Unnecessary? Exciting? Dry? Best left to professional theologians? Or is it something everyday Christians could be doing? Should they?

2 Could you do theology – working through the essential and important elements of the faith, knowing what you believe and why you believe it?

Look at the last two full paragraphs on page 1. Could theology possibly be not just theories about faith, not just an academic pursuit, but a way to more fully embrace the living of faith? What might this mean?

3 Have you ever been in this situation? (top of page 2)

“Even on those matters of faith we may feel strongly about, there is often a challenging opposing voice—sometimes quite sarcastic, and too often from other Christians—that attacks what seems precious and vital to us.”

4 Have you ever been that voice?

5 What really matters and what doesn’t? This book will deeply engage this question, and at times it may be unsettling. Why might we be willing to suffer this?

6 Comment on Thomas Aquinas. (page 2-3) What do you think about his effort to summarize the faith, and his personal experience of the Holy Spirit? How might this apply to the author’s efforts in writing, and your efforts in reading and doing theology?

7 See the paragraph on page 3 that begins, “As a foundational principle…”

Explain these key purposes of theology in your words, then consider whether there are others that should be included. What we’re looking for here are answers to the question, “Why are we bothering with this at all?”

8 Note the author says, “It will begin with some basic theology…” For some readers this may seem too basic, and for others it may be the first time of really having certain classic ideas of the faith explained in a clear and concise manner. One reader said, “I’ve been hearing these concepts since boyhood, but it wasn’t until I spent 2 hours with this book that I really understood what they meant.” Many terms used easily by theologians and by well-studied Christians are really incompletely understood by others.
Take a few moments to share terms you’ve heard but perhaps didn’t fully comprehend. They could be as simple as “salvation,” as complex as “sanctification,” or as denominationally varied as “veneration.”

9 How about this frank admission:

“Before we go on: There are any number of common Christian beliefs that I will reject or defend, about which others who are well-regarded in the Church have taken a different view. Oh well.”

Though he goes on to say his effort will to be orthodox and be true to Jesus, does this raise concerns about what will come in the pages ahead? If so, how will you deal with ideas, theologies, practices or traditions that might be at odds with yours? (Actually, the book deals with this in depth later on, but engage the question here on your own!)

10 The author says we should be “willing to use the wonderful minds and hearts with which our Creator has gifted us.”

This is one place in the text where the author points to one of the six key areas of learning at the top of this Study Guide, “The goal is to sharpen the Christian mind and strengthen the Christian heart.” Take this as a cue to be alert to similar places in the text where these key areas stand out. It will help in understanding the overall structure and method of the book.

11 The author says, “Test what I write with Scripture. Test what I write with the leading of the Holy Spirit.” What does that mean to you personally? Do either of these seem more important, and are they independent of one another?

12 Read the paragraph beginning, “Then we will begin to go deeper and wider…” and ending, “even across significant divides.”

Is this even a worthwhile goal? What might it cost us? What might we gain?

13 Define “truth” according to the author. (page 5)

14 What happens when we define truth as a principle, independent of God or Scripture or the teachings and commands of Jesus?

15 Can truth as a principle or concept become a distraction or idol, or is all truth God’s truth?

16 Explain simply, in your own words, “essentials” and “non essentials.” (page 6) Explain “if and only if.”
What is the difference between “essential” and “important”? Can something be really important without therefore becoming essential?

What is the danger of declaring important things – in life or in the faith – as essential if they are not? How does this error show up in partisan debate? In church disputes? In our own words and behavior?

Is it helpful to discard everything except that which is essential? This might seem courageous and radical – but is it actually helpful and hopeful in the end? Argue one side of this as rigorously as you can. Then switch and argue the other side of it. Then examine how you constructed each argument.

What have you discovered about the key differences between what is essential and what is important? How will you be able to apply this in your life of faith, in your study, in your daily living?

We will get into this in more depth later in the book, but for now please consider that this understanding can prove to be a valuable tool for insights into the faith, in the understanding and interpretation of Scripture, and in “doing theology.”

Page 4, “Outline of This Book,” sets out what is ahead in your reading and study, chapter by chapter. Though it isn’t explicit in the outline, the contents actually fall into some broad, related categories: method (how we understand), the elements of faith and belief (including denominational distinctives and histories), understanding the nature of religious concepts (which are not the same as revelation or Scripture), and reconciliation.

7. What is your reaction to the author’s invitation, “To be plain, if you’ve not yet set your heart on him, not yet trusted him, not yet said, ‘Yes,’ you can do it anytime, anywhere. You will be heard and accepted immediately. Even now.”?

8. How does salvation change a person’s life here on earth?

   Give a detailed answer to this question.

3. Compare Sanctification to self-improvement.

Chapter 6 – Living With Believers

1. What things that we do as Christians are misdirection from loving each other — that look religious or holy but are actually not loving? What do you do that is this way?

2. Read the second half of page 45.

   Is the author overstating his case? If so, in what way? If not, how are we to respond to offenses, dishonor, sarcasm and disrespect? Have you been guilty of such actions? Do you object and speak up when others behave in this way? Do you fear being the next victim of such treatment? (These are hard questions!)
3 Reflect on Matthew 5:43-48. What does it say to you?

4 Reflect and comment on Colossians 3:8-17.

5 Take up the author's challenge on page 47 to make a list.

6 Write an in-depth paper (no more than 5 pages double spaced) regarding the following:

   Why is it so hard to love one another? Give an example from your own experience of a person (no real names please) who was a real challenge, your first reaction to that person, your action toward them in working to love them in the way Jesus would have us love, and their response to your efforts (positive or negative or both.) If the person continued to be mean-spirited and annoying, what did you do? If the person changed by being loved by you, what was the result of that change?
